

The first time I used a moving service was when I was 21. It is now 40-some years later, and basically nothing has changed. If there is an association of movers, and I assume there is, they should be ashamed of the reports in published news stories as well as scoldings (they are not more than that) from DOT which show that movers continue their "highway robbery" and "holdups", any puns intended. My opinion would be that these regulations will do little, if anything, to change these practices which hold consumers' goods hostage. Too bad.
